A Successful South Carolina Weekly.

The Press and Banner, of Abbeville, S. C., which has recently passed its thirty-seventh anniversary, is said to have cleared a "net profit in its business every year." It is the property of Hugh Wilson, who purchased it in 1859, and after storms and much laboring at the oars, seems to have found smooth water. In proof that the Press and Banner has been a money maker, it may be mentioned that all the money Mr. Wilson has was made through his paper, and that he is now a director in the Abbeville Cotton Mill, whose founding is due to his efforts.—Newspaperdom.

Rounds About Town.

The Masonic mass meeting last week passed off most pleasantly. A large number of the brethren with their families were most hospitably entertained by Clinton Lodge No. 3 A. F. M. of this city. About 12 o'clock they assembled in the Court House when the meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Ariali, after which the choir led by Prof. Jas. A. Hill on the cornet, accompanied by Mrs. J. M. Wallace on the organ rendered most charmingly the Masonic Ode "Hall Masonry Divine" After which Past Grand Master W. T. Branch delivered the address of welcome, which was delivered in his own happy style, conched in language both chaste and beautiful. At the conclusion of his remarks, he in a very happy manner introduced Rev. J. A. Cliffon who delivered the address of the occasion which was eloquent, instructive and entertaining. Solicitor Ansel was present, and being called upon, responded in a neat little speech which was enjoyed by all. At the conclusion of the address all affilliated Massons, with their families, repaired to the old Fair ground, where a splendid barbeaued dinner was served. Thus ended another happy day for the Masonic fraternity.

RUNAWAY BOY.

About some things Florence was sure she knew better than her mother although she was but ten years old One was about her new spring coal and hat. She wanted to wear them at once, but her mother said she must wait for some time yet. This made her quite cross, but her mother did not allow her to wear her new clothes any sooner for that.

One bright, snnny morning her mother was in bed with a headache, and Florence had to get ready for school by herself. She went to the closet for her old coat and winter hood, and there on the nail was the nev coat, and on the shelf lay the hat all

"I do believe I will wear it to day." she said to herself. "I am most sure mamma would let me, it is so bright and warm." But she was really not at all sure. She would not have put on the new coat and hat and gone so quietly downstairs for fear Mary, the nurse, would see her, if she had been. When she arrived at school, all the little girls came about her to admire her new clothes, and she felt very proud.

At recess the children were playing in the yord. The ground was damp and muddy, for it had rained all the day before. Florence was having a time of tag quite forgetting her fine time of tag, quite forgetting her new coat when suddenly, as she was running, her foot caught, and down she fell in the very muddlest part of the yard! The others ran to help her, and laughed merrily when they saw the plight she was in. But Florence Ice cold sods water served at Harrison & did not laugh; she was much nearer Same. Give us a trial.

The front of her pretty light coat was black with mud, and her hat was bent out of shape. While the cold comfort soda try red messina older ones were brushing off the mud and trying to console her, the bell rang, and they had to go in to school. Florence was able to pay very little attention to her lessons, and received a number of bad marks, the first she had that week. To make matters worse when she came out of school the rain was pouring down, and she had no umbrella. With her old coat and hood on, she would have liked the fun of running home in the rain. Now it was anything but funny, particularly as her mother opened the door when she got home, and saw her condition.

"You may go upstairs," said her mother, "and wait till I come." The waiting was dreadful. Mary came and took her coat and hat away, but did not speak to her. At last he mother came, and Florence would have preferred any punishment to her mother's way of talking, it made her feel so small and so ashamed.

She cried a great deal, and said she was very sorry. But that did not take the stain off the coat. She was obliged to wear it, however, stain and all, until it was outgrown, to teach her that wrong-doing has lasting effects I am glad to say that it did teach her.
